To whom it may concern of the Federal Communications Commission:

K-Love Radio serves my needs as well as the needs of the community more than most other radio stations out there. They do not simply play music, but give encouraging advice and counsel listeners to help us get through personal matters. The music that they play is listener-friendly in that it is great for a 5-year-old as well as an 80-year-old.

K-Love is about FAMILY, something that America has lost sight of this past decade. People should be encouraging a station that is trying to promote good moral values and family togetherness instead of knocking it. Parents do not have to worry about their teenager listening to depressing songs that portray lifestyles of pain and anger. I know people that do not believe in God or have spiritual beliefs that listen to K-Love. Some people in this world do not believe in the one true God that I worship, but that does not mean that they should restrict others from doing so. Why can't people be open minded and realize that at least we are a positive group that turns to God's love and compassion instead of violence and self-degradation.

It would be a sad loss to see K-Love displaced. There are many other stations out there that deserve that spot more than K-Love; stations that put people down or jest about their problems during their cry for help. K-Love provides a hotline where people can call to talk to a pastor, or to share a concern or prayer request. Their staff even meets four times a day to pray for the concerns of the listeners! I do not know of any other station that does that or that cares that much for their supporters. Most stations only care about their ratings and how much cash they are going home with that day. They have low morals and play whatever garbage they think people will listen to. K-Love could care less about money other than what they need to keep the station running. I truly hope you decide to keep K-Love in its current location. Displacing them would be a step backwards that this country definitely does NOT need!
